BAGGAGE.

THE AMOUNT FOR A RAILROAD WILL BE LIABLE.

In the case of Carrow vs. The Michigan Central Railroad Company, decided by the Supreme Court at the last term, an important point was decided as to the extent of the liability of the railroad for valuable baggage, when not shown to the Company. Carrow was a commercial traveler for a New York jewelry firm, on his way West, having with him, as he claimed, about $30,000 worth of jewelry in a trunk. This trunk was nearly of the common kind, and covered with canvas, though there was some evidence given on the case to show that it was made heavier and stronger expressly for its particular purpose. It, however, had no distinctive mark, and was checked through like ordinary baggage, Carrow failing to give any notice about it, or inform the Company as to the value of its contents. At Buchanan, Mich., on the trip, the trunk was burned, and Carrow brought suit for the whole value of its contents. He recovered a verdict last fall before Judge Trow for about $30,000, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court holding that the Company was not liable for more than the value of an ordinary traveler's trunk.

The Court, in reaching this conclusion, had no notice of the contents of the trunk; that there was not anything to show the value, but that there was evidence that the Company had a part to give such a trunk to the Company, and that it would require great negligence, amounting to willful neglect, to place the trunk in the hands of a person who was not a traveler, and that it was the duty of the Company to see that it was not so.

CHICAGO COURTS.

Judges Drummond and J. C. Hopkins, the latter from Madison, Wis., were engaged yesterday in hearing a case involving a conflict of jurisdiction between the Circuit Court of Wayne County, Ind., and the United States Circuit Court for that district. The case was brought by the Rockford, Rock Island & St. Louis Railroad Company, and to the effect was: Last spring a bill was filed against the Port Wayne, Monro & Cincinnati Railroad to wind up its affairs. A demurrer was filed and sustained, but before the case was amended, this, however, was not done for six months, and in the meantime, a suit was begun in the Indiana State Court to foreclose a mortgage for $1,800,000, and Receivers were appointed in December last. A few days afterwards the bill in the United States Court was amended, and A. P. Edgerton appointed Receiver. He obtained possession of the road from the State Receiver's clerk, but was soon after arrested for contempt, and brought before Judge Hopkins. As, however, the case involved a conflict of jurisdiction, Judge Drummond's action in appointing Edgerton Receiver, Judge Hopkins came to hear the case with Judge Drummond. After a long argument, an order was made discharging Mr. Edgerton from contempt, and a decision was made by the United States Court, who was then sent to the Court for the purpose of settling the case. #### LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE:
Chicago, Feb. 5.—The reading public will have shown their appreciation of the enterprising omnibus companies on Milwaukee avenue and Randolph street, which have compelled the car companies to reduce their rates by patronizing the new mode of conveyance. The omnibuses are not only more comfortable, but they are also more economical. The car companies, however, are not satisfied with this, and are endeavoring to reduce their rates by other means. They are doing this by increasing the number of cars, and by increasing the number of passengers. This is a very bad policy, and it is one which should be stopped. The omnibus companies are doing a good business, and they are doing it in a very economical and comfortable way. They are also doing it in a way which is very convenient for the passengers. The car companies, on the other hand, are doing a bad business, and they are doing it in a very uneconomical and uncomfortable way. They are also doing it in a way which is very inconvenient for the passengers. It is time that the car companies were stopped, and that the omnibus companies were allowed to do their business in peace.

Chicago, Feb. 5.—We are in the midst of our annual season of indignation against the gamblers. This time the epidemic has broken out during that season of the year when the public mind is most susceptible to such outbreaks. A very large proportion of the indignation which is felt against the gamblers is due to the fact that they are doing a bad business, and they are doing it in a very uneconomical and uncomfortable way. They are also doing it in a way which is very inconvenient for the public.

look most revoltingly fresh and pretty. When we appeared in the morning, father (who always comes in to breakfast from out of doors, with a hat on his head) very good naturedly said (and on the nearest glazier) announced that "those English girls started to walk up to the summit of the Egeghithorn two hours ago, and are coming back in time to cross the Aletsch glacier to go to the Belle Alp for the night!" Before long they came in, broke and were as usual: "Oh no! not tired at all! I found it a pleasant walk, for anything more than a lunch, they were off again. We groined in spirit as we saw them disappear around a promontory."

then, the sky was one vast shen of blue. Everything was so beautiful, so good, so sweet, and except the lovely Lady Adelina de Chimpanssee, she was in the dinnure. Bloodier she rubbed her eyes, and she saw the lovely Lady Adelina de Chimpanssee performing that act heaved a vast sigh. Just that moment her mamma dropped from the tree above her.
 "My daughter," said the Duchess de Chimpans-
 see, "why that sigh?"
 "Ah, mamma, I am so," said Lady Adelina.
 "See how different I am from the rest of our tribe. See how white I am becoming."
 "My daughter," said the Duchess laugherly,
 "as she must have been a consumptive beauty."
 "You should be proud of the difference. We are a lighter race."
 "Oh, I know, mamma. See what little candle appendages we have; all the other folks can bang from trees by their tails, but we are compelled to sit on the line."
 "We are advancing, my dear. You are whiter than I am; you can talk in your youth, I would not till middle-age; your grandmother is old, I know, can only grunt it. You are moving to a higher sphere."
 "Mamma, mamma, none of our folks will marry me," said Lady Adelina, pouting.
 "No, my child; it has been decreed that there shall be no intermarriage between the two tribes."

Outang, who is even wiser than you are, as a wife."

"Oh, mamma," panted the Lady Adelaide, "that's splendid. Will he come soon?"

"Heatrain yourself. People of high blood and short count are apt to get excited. He will be here in a short time."

Lady Adelaide went away to look for coconuts; the children sat on the rock, and reflectively scratched each ear.

CHAPTER II.

THE Duke de CHATELAIN, was Chief of a very large tribe. He had a number of the sort because he would have made his overlying fortune. He had but one child, the Lady Adelaide, who was the only one of the tribe who could read. He had a number of the live stock over which he ruled, many of the neighboring chiefs desired to marry her. Her parents, however, insisted that she should be a noble, the fountain head of the new race to which all their traditions taught them they were to ascend. Her parents, however, insisted that she should be a noble, the fountain head of the new race to which all their traditions taught them they were to ascend.

The Duke proposed the matter to the Prince.

"As I am the Prince, as he adjusted his eyes-glass, "Is it nice?"

"She is a very beautiful," replied the Duke.

"And she the Prince," he is—aw—much strange?"

MAGNOLIA!
 "I will—step—step down,—aw—look at it!" murmured the Prince, carelessly. "By surprise, you know."

"That," agreed upon, and the Duke departed. The Prince knew his worth; he was quite white and he was not troubled with slightest particles of camellia; but his Ethiopianness was big prize and he resolved to win it.

One week after the Duke had offered his daughter, the Princess, for Senegambia, with the intention of looking at the fair face of Lady Adela.

CHAPTER III.
 The Prince was wandering through the woods of Senegambia, gaily humming:
 "I'd be a butterfly
 Were in a lover's web."
 When his eyes fell upon a lovely chimpanzee, reclining in a shallow brook, sending a coo-sound. The Prince was the loveliest he had ever seen; his heart was touched at once. He raised his eyes—glance and stared at her until his eyes fell in complete confusion.

"Fair chimpanzee," said he, "will you not—aw—tell me your—aw—name?"

"Adele," stammered the chimpanzee.

The beautiful! With tison—as—marry me?"

The Lady Adelia threw the remains of her moment at the head, a Chinaman who was loosing in a neighboring town, fell into the arms of the Prince, and gently murmured, "I am all thine."

They were married in great splendor. The night Rev. Bishop Barbon, assisted by the Rev. Chancellor Ays, performed the ceremony. The choir sang that lovely anthem, "Monkey married the baboon's sister." Lady Adelia and her husband rubbed noses, and then the bride started on her tour on an elephant with one trunk.

CHAPTER IV.

The seasons changed, summer leaped into autumn, autumn into winter, and winter into spring. There was great rejoicing for the grand wedding of the Prince and Princess. The bride, however, was at a anomaly in that region; it had no tide, it had flat feet, it had a white skin, it had no hair on its body. All these things were examined. It was not an octopus—it was not a salamander; evidently it was a new species. Then a family concave was called.

"What shall we do with everybody."

The Duchess de Chimpanzee, who was languid-making mud pie, said:

TO-NIGHT,

A Paris correspondent says: "Another celebrity has just been buried, but with all the rites of the Church,"—the Comtesse Kinsloff, the wife of a once Russian Ambassador to Paris. She was married from her husband some after their marriage, and since then found her only distraction in gambling. Not a gaming-table in Europe but gambled on as a chess-board great, or miniature, were charming as she was elegant; in driving in her carriage or traveling by rail she passed her time playing chess. In London she was the Countess de Kinsloff, and caused her for her passion for reform, and she blamed him she would try and return, and for a year indeed she was at it as a gambler; she felt she observed her promise, as during the twelvemonth she always stood at the first table, and might have been so had not an accident broken both her legs, and confined her to a bath-chair."
